Students Prepare før the Rivalry Føøtball Game

By Jeffersøn Steelflex

LIBERTY, Ølentangy-- In the absence øf the legendary Future Tailgaters øf America, Liberty's students have taken matters intø their øwn hands in preparatiøn før tønight's game. Øur øwn Liberty Patriøts føøtball team plays against the district rival Ølentangy Braves, whø we hate because øur name alsø starts with Ølentangy. Tø prepare før the game, students have taken the liberty tø cøver up each and every "Ø" that they find øn campus. Alsø, students jumped intø the frigid Big Bear Farms Lake as anøther way tø prøtest the team tø the east. Principal Starner was initially disappøinted with the relatively møderate amøunt øf schøøl spirit, but was pleased tø see it pick up with søme møre examples øf schøøl spirit that tøøk place earlier tøday.

Øne øf these displays øf spirit was the bønfire made øut øf Braves t-shirts, høødies, and øther memørabilia. Liberty students circled the fire while perførming traditiønal patriøt dances and chanting "yøu can't dø that clap clap clap clap clap". They then hønøred the age øld traditiøn øf leaving halfway thrøugh the bønfire. Søme crazy students tøøk tø the pøpular møvie review website, Røtten Tømatøes, tø give Pixar's Brave hørrible reviews and tank its audience scøre. Absølute madness.

Øne traditiøn between these twø schøøls is tø paint the øther's røck. These røcks are løcated near bøth schøøls. This year, høwever, Liberty students tøøk it tø a new level. Several students travelled apprøximately 300 meters away frøm Ølentangy last night and used trebuchets tø launch paint all øver the schøøl, 90 kiløgrams at a time. After just a few minutes, Ølentangy was cømpletely blue and silver. Due tø Ølentangy's stark lack øf trebuchets, they tried a similar maneuver with catapults, but failed miserably.

For those of you who keep asking what a trebuchet is, I took a few seconds out of my day to google this picture so you wouldn't have to. Children, this is a trebuchet, and it's awesome. Way better and cooler than catapults, and especially cannons.

A Critique of the Liberty Theatre Workshop

By Frederick Durst

LIBERTY, Olentangy-- Liberty High School's theater department amazed critics and consumers alike last week with a fresh take on an age-old romance story that has been a staple of classic literature for years. The story seemed to come alive on the stage due to a multitude of brilliant performances from our very own Liberty students. However, I do feel that it was missing a few things.

When I was first told that Pride, Prejudice, and Zombies would be coming here to Liberty, I was ecstatic. It has been far too long since a true classic piece of romance writing has graced our school. They certainly delivered on the romance (the very auditorium seemed to fill with emotion as tears leaked from the ceiling over the stage). Nonetheless, they were missing one thing- the zombies. Now I don't mean to disrespect their vision for this adaptation, but that seems like a pretty key element to be lacking. As a huge fan of the MCU (Matrimony Cinematic Universe), this was hugely disappointing.

Many critics have shown appreciation for the passionate kiss at the end, and although it was certainly a convincing performance, but I would have much preferred some mouth-on-decaying-mouth action instead. I will also admit that the loud and comedic performance of Mrs. Bennet was incredibly entertaining. However, would it have been too much to make her a lifeless, brain-hungry monster? That couldn't have changed too much.

In the absence of any zombie killing gore, the only thing stabbed through the heart was me.

"Weekly" Market Watch

By Richard Dastardly

The shocking collapse of the beloved Rusty Musket and the confusing but meteoric rise of The Patty Shack headline this week's business news. Here at The Trebuchet, we feel that other publications just aren't reporting on these important topics in a satisfactory way. We feel that it's our responsibility to change this. Here are this week's six most notable performers:

Updated PSAT Rules Script

By Frederick Durst
LIBERTY, Olentangy-- Due to misunderstandings of the PSAT rules in the past, the test creators have updated the scripted rules this year. In an effort to keep our readers updated on these changes, we will include the script below:

Welcome to the PSAT. We will begin the assessment shortly. Please fill out the information by pricking your finger lightly (with a number two pencil ONLY) and writing in blood. Mechanical pencils are for nerds. If you do not have a number two pencil, please raise your hand, and we will point and laugh at you. The testing environment will be kept at a comfortable four thousand degrees celcius for optimal test taking conditions. The following rules must be abided, or your test will be lit on fire.

1) You may not discuss any of the test taking material. We're embarrassed, I guess.
2) If your phone rings during the test, it's probably the beginning of the wave of spam emails you will be receiving, do not be alarmed.
3) If you need to leave your seat to go Juul, cucumber melon hibiscus flavor pods will be provided.
4) Any phones, computers, smart watches, pagers, fax machines, telegraphs, or messenger pigeons must be powered down and turned in.
5) If a student repeatedly acknowledges that this is a practice test, they're probably getting the dickens.

We will begin the test now. Good luck.

Letter To The Editor

By Richard Dastardly
LIBERTY, Olentangy--
Dear The Trebuchet,
Hello. I have some concerns in regards to the article "Grocery Store Civil War Makes Powell Less Comfortable". This article was written by Drake Parker. The suggestive nature of the article frankly appalls me. I know you thought it was a joke and you thought it would be funny, but its not. The Civil War is not something to be joked about. 620,000 Americans died fighting each other. I know you probably didn't know the significance of the Gettysburg Address or the entire war itself, but I have a lot of friends whose lives have been impacted by this horrible conflict. I do hope that you sincerely apologize for the offense and rescind the article.

Dear Trebuchet,
Who do you think would win: Ten trillion lions or the sun?… This would take place on an even playing field of course.
- xXxEarthTrutherxXx

Dear xXxEarthTrutherxXx,
Give me the lions anyday. Just hear me out. What eats the sun? That's right, grass. And what eats grass? Antelopes. What eats antelopes? Lions. By the "Transitive Property™" lions eat the sun. Now give me TEN TRILLION of them. Do you know how many ten trillion is? Case Closed.
